Excerpt: . . . of color changes and accurate comparisons of color is a much to be desired field of investigation, as has been brought out in this Society. The subject can be approached only by accurate colorimeter comparisons with as pure a set of colored glass slides as it is possible to produce. Opalescence could be studied in a manner similar to the study of turbidity in water by means of standard lamps and tubes, and of course is especially suited for microscopic investigation. Fluorescence. It has recently been found by Berthelot that radium rays impart to some minerals like quartz peculiar colors which disappear on heating the mineral. The subject is, of course, too new for discussion. The index of refraction and its relation to the total optical properties, the composition and physical properties of glass have been so exhaustively treated in the work of Schott..
