Excerpt from The Political Memoranda of Francis Fifth Duke of Leeds: Now First Printed From the Originals in the British Museum; Edited, Together With Other Papers, and With Notes, Introduction, and Appendix The Duke of Leeds was a statesman of the Ciceronian type. He represents a time when the business of the country was conducted by the members of a few privileged families, who, conscious of their position and of their duties, trained themselves carefully for their high behest, and considered that each action of their lives should reflect the magnanimity which properly belonged to so lofty a vocation. The Memoranda commence two years before the out break of the American war, but as they were not written down till 1780 the entries of the first six years are deficient in fulness and interest. When that year is reached we find the King supporting Lord North and the war policy against the growing discontent of the country. The Duke Of Leeds joins thehgppqposition, and is dismissed from the Lord Lieutenancy of the East Riding. Under June 1780 some graphic pages are devoted to...
