Although the household is the base unit to which food stamp benefits are issued, most of the people who benefit from the program are children or elderly persons. In addition, more than 20 percent of recipient households have some earnings from work, making the program a critical source of nutritional support for the nations working poor. The federal government funds all food stamp benefits and shares with the Federal Role states in the administrative costs of distributing benefits to eligible recipients. The federal government pays all costs for printing the stamps, distributing the stamps to the states, and destroying the stamps after they are used. The government also pays all costs associated with approving and monitoring food stores authorized to redeem food stamps. In addition, the government pays roughly 50 percent of the costs incurred by the states in administering the program. These costs include certifying recipients for eligibility, distributing benefits to...
