Excerpt: .gazed, And I lost her in a swoon. At the dawn a risen lark Pierced the clouds with such a lay, With such sweetness fill d my brain, That I woke and saw the day. And I smelt the window rose, Heard the sharp bleat from the pen, Felt the living breeze blow in, And was one with living men. Love! I lose you once again--For the sad, wild dreams are flown That your face made yet so sweet--And I know I am alone. From the lonely light I turn, Fold my eyes, feign sleep again; Weak, so weak, a little while--Till I learn to bear this pain. I shall bear it, knowing well You will love me out of sight, Till the veil that hangs between, Parts, and yields you with the light. MY BABE. 1 . Ay yes! I see the morning...
